

Traveling

Becky G. Luck Middle School

At some point during their childhood, most people have heard the phrase, “What do you want to be when you grow up?” Some kids understand exactly what they want to do and who they want to be when they’re older, while others grow up to be adults without knowing what path they are taking. As a hesitant eighth grader, I can honestly express that I have absolutely no clue what my plans are for the future. Therefore, instead of stating what my dream career is, I’m going to explain the possibilities and choices of what it could be.

I have a variety of hobbies including cooking, writing, and helping people, so I am naturally interested in having a career that relates to any of those activities. I might strive to be a chef or baker because of my interest in food cuisine. Maybe I would want to be an author or editor because I enjoy creating literary work, such as essays and stories. I would also consider being an activist, lawyer, or motivational speaker to help make the world better in some type of way.

Although I would appreciate a career that involves those interests, I have always had a strong desire to travel. Finding a career that would involve traveling would probably be my biggest dream. I have an endless list of places in this world that I would be thrilled to visit. A few examples on that list are Paris, Amsterdam, Indonesia, and French Polynesia.

Paris is the type of place that all tourists wish to be present at once in their lifetime, as a result of endless happenings and the eternally favored Eiffel Tower. It is also the neighbor to Belgium, Italy and Spain. If I were to catch a flight there, I would never want to leave.

Amsterdam, capital of the Netherlands, is a gorgeous city. Festivals, cafes, museums, and canals are always leaving people with something to do. I’d be delighted to bring a few of my friends there, because we would definitely have a spectacular time.

Indonesia is home to many volcanoes and national parks. I’ve always been fascinated by nature, how breathtaking and flawless it truly is. The chance to witness the beauty of everything would be extraordinary.

For a person who loves the beach, Bora Bora, French Polynesia is the definition of perfect. During the summer, my family and I camp in places around Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Michigan, and we always verify in advance that there will be a beach near that area.

Therefore, in spite of the fact that I would prefer a career that involves my hobbies and relates to traveling, if I have a job that puts a smile on my face, that’s all that matters to me.
